Maldives in general

- More than 7,000 low lying coral islands in a 1,200 mile chain southeast of India, the Maldives is an amazingly beautiful dive destination. About 200 islands are inhabited and several are devoted entirely to small resorts that offer average to excellent tropical reef diving with big fish action. Year-round daily temperature is roughly 85°F (30°C) and there is abundant rainfall distributed evenly from May through December.
- The biggest attraction are the schools of fish that patrol the reefs in colorful packs: Humpback and Black and White Snappers, Trevally Jacks, Barracuda, Batfish, Unicornfish, Yellowback Fusiliers and Harlequin Sweetlips. This incredible marine life combines with exquisite coral covered backdrops to create many extraordinary dives.
- Some of the larger liveaboards operating in the Maldives may travel to the far north, to Baa Atoll, which offers completely unspoiled and adventurous diving. To add to your Maldivian experience, Baa Atoll has many large uninhabited islands to explore, there's nothing quite like the feel of walking along a palm fringed sandy beach with not a soul in sight.
- Alternatively, some boats may head south to Felidhu Atoll or west to Ari Atoll where you can enjoy some excellent shark and manta ray diving.
- There are three distinctly different types of diving in the Maldives: inside the atolls, outside the atolls and inside the channels or passes, where the currents are strongest and you'll find the greatest congregation of fish life. Most intriguing are the cleaning stations, found around every corner and under every ledge. Groupers, Snappers, Surgeonfish, Eels, Parrotfish, even Giant Napoleon Wrasse park casually in corners while armies of wrasse, shrimp and other assorted cleaners pick at debris in their open gills and cavernous mouths.
